INTRODUCTION

Members of this family who have delved more or less into its genealogical lines have spelled the name in various ways, but the pioneer, Daniel, signed his name not only to his will but to documents requiring his signature as Justice of the Peace, as "Streing," and Charlotte, his widow, used the same spelling when signing her will many years later, but their children spelled it Strang, which represented in English what it sounded in French.

In the letter of James II, addressed to the Solicitor General, authorizing the issuing of warrants of denization to French exiles, appear the names of Daniel Streing, Charlotte, his wife, and their children, Peter, Matthew, Mary and Anne (French Protestant Exiles by Agnew, Vol. VI. page 60). None of these children nor their descendants have ever been found in this country, unless the daughter Mary should prove to be the adopted daughter Mrs. Gilliot, mentioned in the Strang Manuscript on page nineteen of this volume.

As there was another Streing family in London at the time, it is only fair to assume that there was a confusion of parentage.

Daniel Streing was a member of the Reformed French Church, and in his later years a Ruling Elder. He was made Justice of the Peace because he was the only one in the community who met the required qualifications of a knowledge of the English language.

It should be most pleasing to his descendants to know of their elegibility to the Huguenot Society of America, and I consider it a most happy privilege to preserve and place before them many lines of descent from one of our most widely known Westchester County French pioneers who suffered many privations in a new and wild country for his religious convictions.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPHINE C. FROST.

THE STRANG GENEALOGY

*COLONIAL DAYS AND WAYS

In 1672 Daniel L,Estrange of Orleans, France, was matriculated as a student of philosophy in the Academy of Geneva, Switzerland, which at that time was the only existing place where a French Protestant could receive a liberal education in his own language. The "pretended reformed" were not allowed to have schools of their own in France; nor, on the other hand, was it permitted to send their children to the Catholic schools without previously renouncing their own and professing the national faith.

A few years later we find that M. L'Estrange married Charlotte LeMestre of Orléans. A few years later still, the pair are residing in Paris, where the husband is traditionally believed to have been an officer of the Royal Guard —a tradition which seems to derive some support from the fact that after his arrival in England he is known to have held a lieutenancy in the Royal Guard of James the II. Strange as it may seem, many Huguenots filled positions in the personal guard of Louis XIV., where they were comparatively safe from persecution, as their places were held by a certain unwritten law of inheritance from the days when Henry IV. had filled its ranks, from the commander down to the privates, with those upon whose fidelity he could best rely; and these were undoubtedly his old brethren in arms and in the faith which political reasons had caused him to forsake.

While her husband was in the Royal Guards Mme. L'Estrange was one of the ladies in waiting upon the dauphiness, Marie de Baviére, the gracious, studious, retiring and accomplished daughter-in-law of Louis XIV. Thus the wife of the Huguenot was often obliged to serve her turn of duty at St. Germain and sometimes at Versailles. Although Mme. L'Estrange was well known to be of the "pretended reformed" faith, she was not molested, because she was a recognized favorite of the dauphiness. Perhaps the position of his wife at court combined with his own in the Royal Guard to save M. L'Estrange for a while from persecution, although he was known to be a determined, if not an aggressive, Huguenot; but the time came when he was obliged to seek safety in flight, and that, too, without seeing his wife. She was then performing her tour de service at Versailles; and her husband could only send her a verbal message requesting that she should join him, with their child, and as much of their property as she could convert into ready money, at some designated point on the coast, where he would wait for her as long as possible, and whence they could take ship for England.

The person who was intrusted with the message either could not or did not convey it to the wife until many days, if not some weeks, after her husband's flight from Paris. I relate the story as I heard it from the lips of my maternal grandmother, who had it from her paternal grandfather. Some of the particulars which she related are also given in Baird's "History of the Huguenot Emigration to America." I believe that the parts which rest only on oral tradition are not less trustworthy than those quoted by Mr. Baird, which rest upon documentary evidence.

The husband's message was at last delivered, not directly to the wife, but to some one who conveyed it to the dauphiness. In spite of, or rather because of, her high position, the dauphiness was herself so closely watched that she had not the opportunity to transmit the husband's message safely until the hour of the coucher, which that night chanced to be particularly late. As the Huguenot lady was slipping the night-robe over the head of the dauphiness, the latter hastily whispered: "In the cabinet at the foot of the stairs leading to my apartments, you will find one who will tell you what you must do, and do without a moment's delay." Aloud she added: "I am sorry you are suffering so much. You are excused from duty until I send for you."

A few moments later Mme. L'Estrange was in the designated cabinet. There she first heard that her husband had left Paris, she having for some time supposed him to be in hiding in that city, and also learned that, his flight having become known to the authorities, his property had been confiscated. The kind dauphiness had thoughtfully given a purse of money to the messenger, but it was not large, as she was not highly favored by her father-in-law, and had never very much cash at her command. The messenger also had two horses in readiness, and was ordered to accompany Mme. L'Estrange until she should have got safely started on her journey, under the care of friends whom she expected to meet. But the dauphiness had apparently forgotten the existence of the child. The infant of two years was under the care of the married sister of Mme. L'Estrange in Paris, and thither the mother felt that she must first proceed, though the delay was well-nigh fatal to the success of her undertaking.

So well watched was every avenue of escape from Paris that several days were lost before an opportunity for leaving presented itself. One morning, before daybreak, Mme. L'Estrange disguised herself as a very poor woman seeking to go beyond the walls to glean food from the over-laden market wagons coming in. She carried her sleeping child in her arms. Her twin sister, dressed in all respects precisely as herself, followed at a safe distance. Arrived at the city gate, the mother begged to be allowed to take her child with her, but was not permitted, and it was only by addressing the sentry in his native patois of Orléans country that he was induced to let the mother herself pass out, while he retained the child as a hostage for her return. Two hours later, while the awakened child was crying lustily, and the half distracted sentry was busily looking for contraband goods in the market-wagons of the peasants, the aunt suddenly appeared, as if she had come in with the wagons, and claimed the child, which was gladly yielded to the supposed mother. Not for many years after did the true mother again see her child; but when he was grown he came to America, and married here. He it was who related the story to his son, the father of my mother's mother.

During several weeks after Mme. L'Estrange had escaped from Paris her adventures were many. When she finally reached the coast, it was only to find that her husband had been obliged to fly some time before. Her voyage to England was made inside of one of the very large casks in which the common kinds of wine were shipped to the wholesale dealers in London. In similar casks more than sixty persons are said to have been shipped, at the same time, in the hold of the same small trading-vessel, whose English captain was liberally paid for running risks attending such shipments.

During several years there were many hundreds, if not thousands, of escapes made in the same manner; and who can now imagine the horrors of such a voyage? The trip across the English Channel is not very welcome to the majority of travelers to-day, when not more than two or three hours are required, in vessels which, though bad enough according to our present standards, are princely compared with those of two centuries ago. In those days it frequently took a week to cross, and sometimes as long a time, or longer, was spent rocking at anchor, waiting for a favorable wind. Of course, the casks holding human freight were not hoisted on board until the latest moment; but whether waiting on shore in momentary peril of detection, or confined in casks on board ship, what an eternity must every hour have seemed!

With a small store of wine in a leather bottle, and some bread, a pillow or two, and such clothing as might be conveniently packed in with her, the wretched refugee was placed in the great cask, into the sides of which many small holes had been bored to admit air without attracting notice. The head of the cask was then secured in its place, and—carefully right side up—it was placed in the hold, where it was skilfully braced to prevent its being rolled about when the vessel was under way. My mother has seen, in the possession of one of her mother's brothers, a small pillow, filled with softly carded rolls of wool, covered with a stained and faded slip of brocaded silk, which was sacredly treasured because it had eased the buffeted head of the revered great-grandmother, when she was tossed about in her narrow prison in the hold of the blockade-running vessel on the uneasy waves of the English Channel. * * * *

For the first few years after their escape, M. and Mme. L'Estrange fared comparatively well in England, because the friends of the former had procured for him a lieutenancy in the Royal Guard of James II. But this monarch was not himself a Protestant and not too well disposed towards the Huguenots, though state policy forced him to receive them well. It was probably for this reason that Lieutenant L'Estrange, a few months before James was forced to fly from his throne, sold his commission, and, with the proceeds of this sale and that of some jewels, came, with his wife, to this country. Here he soon joined the settlement at New Rochelle and there and in New York City for many years he taught his own language to those Americans who wished to learn it, as well as gave instruction in the classical languages to boys who wished to enter Yale or Columbia (then King's) College. * * * *

It was twenty years after the first Huguenots came to New Rochelle before the refugees could spare the money to build a church or support a pastor. The nearest place where religious services were held in their own tongue was New York City, twenty miles away; therefore, on every Sunday during the year, in fair weather or in foul, all who were able to do so started very early in the morning, that they might not miss the opening prayer at 10:30 A. M. There were few horses owned among the refugees and fewer vehicles of any kind. Such of both as they possessed were devoted exclusively to the use of those who were not strong enough to walk.

Many persons now living (1900) may still remember Miss Isabella Donaldson, lately of Barrytown, N. Y., as a person greatly interested in religious matters. She kept a scrap book composed of original communications concerning the hardships and trials of those who had come to this country under stress of persecution. In this book was a copy of a letter which was written about 1704 or 1705. I give this letter as I copied it in 1860 from her scrap book: "Every week I see the Huguenots pass the house in troops on their way to church in the City. As they pass here all have lunch bags or baskets and also their shoes on their arms. Yet they are not bare-footed, for they are all provided with wooden shoes, such as the peasants wear in France and in the Low Countries. When they reach a stream not far from the church where they have erected a shed, they all stop and such of them as have other shoes change them before going on; the others wash their feet and their wooden shoes and put them on again. They are all very plainly dressed, but some of them are very elegant looking persons with most charming manners. As they pass they are generally singing some of their psalms, that is, the psalms of David, translated into French. Some of the airs are very grand and spirt-stirring, but many of them are sad as dirges, and why should they not be? For surely this people have suffered much. Still they are nearly always smiling and happy. But to think of walking forty miles in going to and from church every Lord's Day- I am afraid my Christianity would never be equal to that." * * * *

Homespun linen yarn of heavy quality was by the Dutch and English colonies dyed and then woven into stripes and checks of varying degrees of ugliness for bed and window curtains. The French settlers used for the same purpose either purely white linen or that which had but one color. The prefered shades seem to have been a light blue, a sort of dusky green, and a subdued gold-color made by dyes of which they brought the secret with them. These linens, when made into hangings bordered by an embroidered vine or arabesque design in white upon the gold or in gold and white upon the blue, or of varied colors upon all the white, were delicately beautiful, and became heirlooms in many a family, including that of my mother's mother. * * * * The bedroom of my mother's grandmother L'Estrange has often been described to me. The floor was painted as nearly as possible to match the subdued gold of the linen hangings. The ceilings and side walls were whitewashed with lime. The windows and dressing tables were hung with tastefully arranged draperies, bordered with a grape-vine pattern embroidered in white, and further trimmed at the edge with a knitted fringe of white linen yarn.

The tall four-posted bedstead of carved mahogany was provided with a tester, with long draw-curtains, over which valances about two feet and a few inches deep, and cut into deep scallops on the lower edge, hung in a full ruffle from the cornice. Foot-curtains and all were of the same linen. * * * * An immense stuffed chair running easily on wooden globes the size of billiard balls, which were the precursors of the modern castor, had a very high back and side wings, against which the head might rest. * * * * This chair had a neatly fitted slip-cover to match the draperies of the room.

The linen yarn for the draperies of this room was all said to have been spun by the first Mme. L'Estrange and her daughters, and it was afterwards woven under their directioin and embroidered by themseves. Until a comparatively late date there still existed other bits of their handicraft, in the shape of fans of peacock feathers and humbler ones of goose and turkey feathers—these last decorated with painted flowers. There were also some hand-screens made by covering small hoops with tightly drawn slips of white silk, the joinings hidden by narrow fringe. One screen was embroidered with colored silks, others were daintily painted, and all were supplied with handles of carved or smoothly turned and polished wood. When a child I saw one of the peacock-feather fans (unfortunately moth-eaten), and a pair of the prettily painted hand screens. The latter were used to hold between the face and the blaze of the open wood fires. * * * *

Very graceful and delicately executed embroideries upon the daintiest of muslins are still shown which were made by members of this family, but possibly by those of a later generation. They are evidently of a French design. In the courts of Louis XIV. lace-making was an art cultivated almost assiduously as that of embroidery. My sister and I now have a few yards of two patterns of lace made by Mme. L'Estrange, which happened to be trimming some part of her under-dress at the time of her escape from Paris. She taught the secret of its manufacture to her daughters, and for three generations her descendants made similar lace, though none was as filmy as that wrought in the boudoirs of Versailles, because it was impossible to get threads sufficiently fine. * * * *

The Huguenot, fleeing from his native land to escape death or worse, felt himself an exile and an outcast, and for those reasons ceased to speak his own language as speedily as possible. My grandmother and her many brothers and sisters were only the fourth generation in this country. As their own grandfather had been left behind in France and educated there they might be counted as the third generation here. Yet with few exceptions their speech betrayed no traces of their national origin. Though their great-grandfather, the refugee, taught his own language for several years, the household use of it was distinctly discouraged by him. * * * * My mother's grandfather and his brother fought in the French and Indian Wars and the first was also an officer in our Revolutionary Army.

* * * * L'Estrange was first known as Streing, then as Strange, and even, in a few cases, was changed to Strong. * * * * * It is a family tradition that when the young Daniel—afterwards the refugee—was sent to Switzerland to enter the academy there as a student of philosophy, July 29, 1672, his surname was purposely misspelled as Streing to avoid giving a clue by which his father's persecutors might discover whither the son had been sent; and that afterward, upon the young student's return to France, and during his stay there as a member of the Royal Guards, he had resumed his rightful name. But later, when he was obliged either to abandon his principles or to fly for his life, he thought it wise to again adopt the name of Streing for the sake of the members of his family still residing in France; for as is well known, the spies of Louis XIV. were almost as active in London as in Paris. * * * * The son did not come over until he was twenty-one or twenty-two years of age. By this time the habit of the name had become fixed. The son seems to have retained his name as L'Estrange, and some of the others used it, at short and irregular periods. Both L'Estrange and Streing appear to be names belonging to the numerous ranks of the petty gentry. * * * *

I would give much if I could recall now the air to which my mother's mother and one of her sisters, both of them considerably over seventy years of age at the time, tremulously sang the psalm in which occur the words:

"Quiconque espére au Dieu vivant, Jamais ne périra!"

But both the air and the rest of the words have escaped my recollection. What has not forsaken me is the memory of two petite but still remarkably handsome women, one of them very erect, the other a good deal bent, but both still vigorous of mind and body, as, in the late twilight of a summer Sunday evening, they sat together in a shadowy room and crooned the old sacred song with a strong and faith-inspired emphasis on JAMAIS, stopping in a startled, half-ashamed way as soon as they discovered "Little Pitchers" trying to efface herself in a dark corner, because she well knew that the entertainment would end as soon as her presence should be known.

STRANG MANUSCRIPT

The following account of the Strang family was communicated by the Rev. Charles W. Baird of Rye, N. Y., to the New York Record, in 1871, and he said there were reasons for believing that the writer was Mr. John Strang of Peekskill, N. Y., a lawyer and a man of some note, who died in that place about forty years ago (1831) well advanced in years. The manuscript is copied leteratim and was comprised in a small book of twenty-eight pages. Mr. Baird says that the hand writing as well as the construction of the sentences, seems to indicate the author's French extraction and of which he seemed pardonably proud.

Strang Manuscript

A memorandum of the family of Daniel l,estrange and of Charlotte, his wife, who escaped from France in the year 1685, in the time of the persecution under Lewis the XIV. and came to America in 1688 and settled at New Rochelle, in the County of Westchester, then Province of New York.

Daniel l,estrange was born about the year 1650 in the City of Paris in France, and educated for the mercantile line of business; which he commenced at the age of twenty-two years, and about that time married to Charlotte Hubert, a daughter of Francis Hubert and Levina his wife, Citizens of Paris in France, and soon after settled himself in the mercantile line in Company with Gabriel Hubert a brother of Mrs. l,estrange his wife. Mr. l,estrange and his wife had been educated in their religious tenants in the Episcopal (Reformed) faith. The Protestants in France had for near a Century under the Edict of Henry IV continued to exercise their religion freely; but in the year 1685 Lewis XIV the King of France instigated through his enthusiasm in the Roman Catholick faith was induced to revoke the Edict of Henry IV which had confirmed the Protestants in the full exercise of their religious tenants and continued ever since that time. This measure in his revocal of this Edict which had secured ever since the time of Henry IV the protestants in France in the full exercise of their religion was allowed and considered at once very arbitrary and very extremely impolitic since scarcely any inconveniencey had arisen in this time nearly a Century from the privileges enjoyed by the protestants under it.

It has been considered irrevocable; therefore the greatest obstinacy of these religionists as is usual, now arose in proportion to the severity with which they were persecuted and threatened. Previous to the Edict of Henry IV which was passed in the year 1598 and called the Edict of Nantes great had been the sufferings of the Protestants; for in the year 1572 in one night at St. Bartholomew's (i. e. on St. Bartholomew's Eve.) 30,000 was massacred among whom was Admiral Coligni. The Prince of Condé was at the head of the Protestants. The Duke of Guise of the Catholicks; that in about one Centry 1,000,000 suffered. In the course of the persecution which ensued the revocal of this Edict by which the liberty of conscience and the full exercise of their religion was denied to the Protestants about 500,000 persons were forced to seek refuge in different parts of Europe, who preferred their liberty of conscience to their Country; about 50,000 of whom sought their safety in Great Britain with liberty of conscience, where they were received by James II who is known by the name of the Duke of York; who openly aided them with money and protected them as protestant refugees with his power; admitting of them without any expense to the privileges of English subjects. Mr. l,estrange and his wife with Mr. Gabriel Hubert and others their neighbors and acquaintances were among those who were noxious to the Roman Catholicks and Jesuits from their great (illegible) adherence to their protestant tenants; and therefore among those who were constrained to seek safety and take refuge in England from the cruelties practiced in the persecution, by death-tortures-exclusion from sleep-confiscation, etc. etc.

Mr. l,estrange and Mr. Hubert in their having sought their safety and relief, retired to the City of London in England where were some of their mercantile correspondents, to whom they introduced themselves; and Mr. l'estrange procured for himself a Lieutenancy in the Guards of King James II and Mr. Hubert resided in the City of London and went into business in the Mercantile line.

Mr. l,estrange and Mr. Hubert in having so escaped had left all of their property in France; and Mr. l,estrange had also left his wife with one child, a son, of about one year old exposed to the prevailing fury of the times, and to the rage and fury of the Roman Catholicks and Jesuits; the property of Mr. l,estrange and Mr. Hubert was confiscated and Mrs. l'estrange being thereby divested of it, she soon became destitute in a great measure of all support and subsistence and nearly suffering through the malice of the Catholicks and Jesuits. Under these circumstances, Mrs. l,estrange was constrained in the course of a year to attempt her escape also, and to seek her husband and brother through the extreme sufferings to which she was exposed to—for subsistence and necessaries of life; this she effected after many and repeated attempts by applications made to the guards of the City for a permission to go out of the same into the suburbs of the City with a view of procuring of such necessaries as those of wood- Meat- Bread- Water etc. etc.—

the latter of which were frequently refused of which she was, and then very often experiencing of the greatest wants. This liberty being refused to her upon several and repeated solicitations and applications made in the most submissive terms backed with the most pressing urgency painted. (sic.) She finally urged by necessity and hunger etc. which not only now but generally proves the parnet of all inventions, was reduced to the necessity again to attempt a repetition of her applications to the guards with all the most feeling urgency, and to propose to deposit her child a son of about two years old with the guards as a pledge for her return.

The escape of the protestants was most narrowly watched and prevented under the most strict, rigid and attentive orders.

This proposition was at length listened to by the officer of the guards upon such her most ardent and pressing entreaty and accepted of and embraced, when she was permitted to pass through the gate of the City upon her so depositing of her child to the care and custody of the guard; and so she effected her warmest and most anxious purpose under the pretense of passing only into the suburbs of the City and for the assigned purposes.

She having by this means effected her escape did immediately proceed to England in the pursuit of her husband and brother and having come to the City of London, and entering the City was passing through a street when she was observed by some Gentlemen from an upper loft of a dwelling house—and being recognized as a French woman and also supposed to be a refugee, they addressed her by an inquiry from where she was—her business—her name and her wishes etc.—when they learned from her that she was a French refugee, and that she was in search of her husband and brother and who they were etc. She was then thereupon invited to come into the house, when she was soon made acquainted with the Gentlemen, and that they were acquainted with her husband and brother, and that she should be conducted to them; that her husband was in the guards of the King and that her brother was in the city and was conducted to her husband by the gentlemen. Mr. l,estrange shortly after was from the extended benevolence and bounty of the English Government enabled to settle himself in the City of London where he resided and remained sometime; he continuing in the Guards until about the year 1688 when he having disposed of his commission was enabled thereby to aid himself and did embark with a number of protestant refugees his associates, many of whom were his acquaintances, for America, and arriving there landed at the City of New York in the course of the year 1688 with his wife and one son or more children, with a large number of those his associates french refugees. Mr. l,estrange now in Company with many of those his associates french refugees and acquaintances proceeded to New Rochelle in the County of Westchester where they making a settlement did settle themselvs in their different and respective professions and callings of life, as Merchants, Physicians, farmers, Mechanicks etc.

Mr. l,estrange having procured for his use a farm of new lands and a lot in the village as named he commenced a grazer and farmer. Among those of Mr. l,estrange intimate friends and associates and who accompanied each other to New York and from thence to New Rochelle was the family of the l,Besley (sicfl)—known by the name of Bayley (the English doctor called)—Allair-Guion Le Hommedieu etc. between the descendants of some of these families there have been much familiar intercourse with Mr. l,estranges (until ?) about the beginning of the Revolution in America.

Mr. l,estrange with his associates having made the settlement of New Rochelle where the Village is, he settled himself down on his lot in the settlement and improved his farm near where Peter Shute Esquire has since resided.

Here he commenced the grazing business and occupation but his want of a competent knowledge of the business was so great as exposed him to many losses and much and great embarrassments and inconveniences, so that he did not from the newness of the country succeed to his expectation and wishes; this induced him to relinquish this occupation and turn his mind to some new course of dependence, and of embarking in the Mercantile line; this he did in the Village, paying an attention to his farming business also. In this way he continued residing in the village a few years in this occupation.

Having resided a few years here he determined to settle himself at the Town of Rye, County of Westchester where was then a settlement progressing; accordingly he moved to Rye and there settled himself down with his family in the Mercantile-Innkeeper and farming business he having procured a Lot in the Town plot and situate upon the East side of the Blind Block and including the lands East thereof and wheare the Park family have since possessed he having likewise a farm lying north of the town plot and near the line of Harrisons Purchase, including the lands since possessed by Jesse Hunt Esquire; he was likewise a proprietor in the pattent of the white Plains where he had a farm situate south of the Court house (now) and where Bartholomew Gedney has possessed and which has descended to the Gedney family. Mr. l,estrange resided in Rye for several years in the respective business of a farmer-Innkeeper and merchant and until his death which was about the year of 1710 as near as can be ascertained, and was buried at the Episcopal Church at which he was an attendant and a member of it is said. His great antipathy to the Catholicks and Jesuits is said to have been very warm and almost unbounded, so that often it occurred upon the very mention of them and upon his recounting and recalling to his mind and memory the sufferings, cruelties and hardships which he had himself experienced, and which he had seen practiced upon the protestants in France he would often be most frequently elated to almost a frenzy and fury and scarcely able to resist his passion and govern and retain himself from violence when any of them was in company with him; of this some instances are related in particular.

Mrs. l,estrange survived Mr. l,estrange with three sons —Daniel- Henry and Gabriel—and four daughters—Mary-Charlotte Penelope and Lucey.

Lewis XIV The King of France in his lifetime or the Duke of Orleans the Regent after the death of Lewis in or about the year of 1720 by a proclamation notified all of such of the protestants refugees who had made their escape leaving their estates and properties in France to return, and that upon their personal application, or upon that of their representatives, that their several Estates and properties should be restored, returned and repossessed to and by them. Whereupon Mr. l'estrange being dead, Mrs. l,estrange embraced the opportunity so offered by the proclamation for an application thereunder for that of her husband Mr. l,estranges property, and being aided by a Mr. Simpson a merchant (a jew) in the City of New York an acquaintance of Mr. l,estranges in his lifetime prepared her youngest son Gabriel who was so patronized by Mr. Simpson to go to France in the name of her husband Mr. l,estrange deceased as his representative, and in pursuance of the proclamation to solicit the restoration of his estate in France which had been left there by him when he made his escape. Mrs. l,estrange having accomplished his preparations he set out for New York where he embarked for England and under the patronage of Mr. Simpson her friend in his way to France counting for the aid of his uncle and his friends in England. He arrived in London and from thence proceeded to France and arrived in the City of Paris where under the aid of Mr. Simpson he made his application in pursuance of the proclamation for the restoration of the estate of his late father. What aid was afforded to him by his uncle Hubert or his friends cannot be ascertained; he was so successful in some measure as report at this time passed as that he acquired a considerable sum, but not the full amount of the estate, and to what amount or sums remains very uncertain—as after he had accomplished his business he returned to England to his uncle Hubert in the City of London and from there forwarded to his Mother and the family a sum and but trifling in comparison with what was expected and what the estate was estimated at and was expected to be obtained as the report then passed, and he settled himself with his uncle Hubert and married in England. He only enabled his Mother by his remittance to settle her two sons and four daughters in a decent way. The Eldest son Daniel at the White Plains upon the farm of land asquired by her husband, Mr. l,estrange as one of the proprietors in pattent of the White Plains, and where the Gedneys have possessed about south of the Court House. Henry, the other son, in the village or Rye on or near the homestead. Her daughters were married into the families of Budd, Purdy and Park of the County of Westchester; except the youngest who married to one Davie a merchant or planter from the West Indies (one of the Islands) where she went with him and settled and resided. Some of her descendants have but a few years ago resided in the City of Philadelphia and were very opulent. Mary married John Budd—Charlotte married Roger Park. Penelope to Samuel Purdy, Esquire and Lucey to ———— Davie. Her son Gabriel after his return from France, remained in England and remained with his uncle Hubert in London where he married a wife and settled himself. He had one child, a son, if no more; report says that he was opulent and in the mercantile line; but his filial duty and attention to his mother; and attention to the family which was much wanting, as he very seldom corresponded with them in the lifetime of his mother and less so with any of the family after her death. He lost his wife by her death and is said to have married a second.

Mrs. l,estrange died in the town of Rye and about the year of 1722 and aged woman as near as can be ascertained from information and was buried in the Church yard of the Episcopal Church of the Town having lived to see all her children settled from her.

This information so far has been acquired by the Narrator, and who is indebted for it to a very respectable old Lady in the City of New York by the name of Mary Gilliot a widow who was a child of a French family of respectable refugees and who escaped from France also with Mr. l,estrange and his wife in the persecution to England and were intimate acquaintances of theirs; and whose parents having died in England Mr. and Mrs. l,estrange patronized and adopted into their family when a child, and brought her to America with them and with whom she remained and with Mrs. l,estrange after the death of Mr. l,estrange until she married, when she settled at New Rochelle and from thence moved to New York (the City) where she lost by death her husband; here she resided when the Narrator acquired this information from her on what was then called Golden Hill in 1772; her attachment and respect for Mr. l,estrange was very warm and strong as appeared from her professions and which her advanced age might serve most probably to strengthen and contribute more too; It was such, as appeared for when she met with the Narrator and heard his name mentioned, and upon inquiry from one of her acquaintance of the family of the Narrator and found that he was a descendant of the family of Mr. l,estrange, she appeared to be most happy and elated with joy, and made the most pressing invitations to the narrator to call upon her, at the same time the most warm asusrances of her respect and regard for Mr. l,estrange and his family and the Joy she possessed at meeting with a descendant of the family. This interview occurred in the office of John Jay Esquire at the time the Narrator was in his clerkship with him, and upon John Jay Esquire's calling the Narrator by name.

To one other most respectable and antient Lady Mrs. Phebe Lee (of the Purdy family) the Narrator is likewise indebted for a confirmation of the most of the circumstances here related as she had heard them related by Mr. and Mrs. l,estrange frequently; and of which and of whom she at the time of the relation to the narrator retained the most perfect recollection.

Gabriel having settled in London and there married had by his first wife a son named William. In the year or about that of 1754 William came to America and while here made several visits to his relations, and spent much time with them. He was a Lieutenant in the British Navy and upon the station at New York where he remained for nearly two years. He had had a liberal education and was esteemed to be a young man of good abilities, and was much inclined to and had a great propensity for liquor; for this reason his father whose aims and intentions were and who had designed him for the Clerical order and gown, was constrained to relinquish such aim and to procure for him a commission in the Navy as Lieutenant. While he was upon the American station he kept up a regular correspondence with the families here; and also after his return to England; some of his letters are yet to be seen in the possession of Jarod (Jared ?) a descendant of one of the families. When he left the station of New York, he was from England stationed in the East India Seas; from whence there is the last direct intelligence from him. His father married a second wife but there is no correct information of any family he had by her or whether any, nor of the Hubert family, two there are of the names in Europe as appears from the Military and Naval Calendars in England and France and also from the Civil records of both those Countries.

Not much different of the year 1740 there came to America a person who called himself l,estrange from Paris in France as he represented and called upon the family in the County of Westchester and particularly upon Daniel l,estrange who was residing in the Manor of Cortlandt, having removed from White Plains. He claimed that he was the son of a Mr. Daniel l,estrange and Charlotte l,estrange and who was left in France with the guards by Mrs. l,estrange in the City of Paris when she made her escape in the time of the persecution of the Protestants and said that he had been brought up in the city of Paris by a person, and who claimed to be an acquaintance once of Mr. and Mrs. l,estrange but whose name cannot be called to mind by the informant but which he mentioned. The informant saw him and heard his relation and claim made; he urged many reasons to induce the family to accept of him as a descendant of Mr. and Mrs. l,estrange with circumstances upon which he founded his claim to be the same person who was left when a child and entrusted to the care of the guards.

Mrs. Phebe Knapp the widow of David Knapp deceased is the informant and recollects well the seeing of him, and her memory serves her as to all the circumstances and the occasion of his visit as he said; she was the daughter of an intimate neighbor of the family of l,estrange where he was.

She says that it was by many persons supposed that it was very probable that he was the same person whom he claimed to be; however that the family had so much their doubts in their minds that they refused to extend to him the hand of connection, and as branch of or descendant of the family and that he left them and proposed to return to France and endeavour to procure the necessary and more authentic evidences of his claim. That his visage and countenance were generally favorable to his claim and much bespoke it, and that many of the circumstances by him related greatly corresponded with those related by Mr. and Mrs.

l,estrange in their lifetimes and not unknown to the families in America and most of their Neighbours.

However he was not known to return again after he left America. In corroboration of this circumstance of his coming to America and presenting himself and his claim as and for the child which was left by Mrs. l,estrange and deposited to the care of the Guards when she made her escape Mrs. Phebe Lee before mentioned as an informant has often related the same as received from Mr. and Mrs. l,estrange—and there are of the family whose memories serve them well to have heard it related by their Ancestors and others, whose respectability and veracity must do away all doubts of that occurrence and circumstances.

known by the Name of the Haff farm and included the lands now owned by Doctor Elias Quereau called the saw mill farm. One situate on the ridge and where once Benjamin Field possessed and One in Stoney Street and where Caleb Morgan now lives. He is said to have likewise procured a farm for each of his children. The first farm he possessed himself and died in the possession of. The Saw Mill (the other) he settled his son Daniel upon. The second he settled his son Francis upon. The Third he proposed for his son Gabriel, but died before he settled thereon.

FIRST GENERATION

1 DANIEL STRANG, born Orleans, France, about 1661, for in 1698 the inhabitants of New Rochelle were listed and his age was given as 37 years. He died Rye, N. Y., 1706-7; married in France, Charlotte, born 1668, as the above mentioned census states her age in 1698 as 30 years; died Rye, N. Y., 1722; daughter of Francis and Livinia Hubert, according to the majority of records, but where the baptisms of her children are recorded in the church Du Saint Esprit, New York City, she is said to be Charlotte Le Mestre, so perhaps she way have been a widow at the time of her marriage to Daniel, as there seems to be evidence of her connection with the Hubert family.

The will of Daniel "Streing," filed in New York, Liber 7, page 374, is dated Dec. 16, 1706, and proven Feb. 11 following, calls himself "Gentleman," resident of the town of Rye, and after all debts are paid wills the remainder of his estate to his wife Charlotte and makes her sole executrix. Witnessed by Oliver Besley, Isaac Mercier, ———— Le Conte and Orlando Payne.

The will of Charlotte "Streing" is recorded in New York, Liber 9, page 436, dated Oct. 20, 1722, and proven January 31st following. Calls herself a widow and of the town of Rye. Leaves her youngest son, Daniel Streing, her large Bible and 10 shillings; she leaves 10 shillings also to Lusian David and Charlotte David, children of her eldest daughter, Lusian Forgee; gives her wedding clothes to her three daughters, Clorinda, wife of Samuel Purdy; Charlotte, wife of Roger Park, and Mary Prudence, wife of John Budd.

To her grandson, Henry Streing, she gives "all that lot of land in the Town of Rye purchased by me from George Lane, Sr., with all the buildings thereon, and he is to pay 30 pounds of my debts." Remains of the estate to be sold and the proceeds divided among the children. Executors, Capt. Oliver Besley and son-in-law Samuel Purdy. Witnesses: James Searle, John Davis and John Carhart.

The fact established by the above will is, that Charlotte at the time of the making of her will in 1722 was still in possession of her wedding clothes which makes one question the traditional escape from Paris, unless they had been preserved and were sent to her later by her son Gabriel.

2 Luisan Strang, called Lucy in the tradition, She must have married very young for she is not mentioned with the rest of the family in the census of 1698 whereby it it may be presumed she had a home of her own. She married Jean David, who is named among the inhabitants of Saint Christopher in 1671. He represented one of the best families in New Rochelle. Before removing to the West Indies, three children are recorded as baptised in the Church Du Saint Esprit of New York City. Jean, born Dec. 23, 1702; Daniel, born Dec. 10, 1704, and Petrus, born April 23, 1707. He settled himself with Gabriel Hubert, in London, said to be his uncle. About 1754 his son William, a lieutenant in the British Navy, spent much time with relatives here. On July 16, 1798, Rev. Silas Constant of Yorktown, N. Y., preached the funeral service of one Gabriel Strang.

19 HENRY STRANG, son of Daniel (4) and Phebe (Purdy) Strang; born 1739, died July 22, 1802, aged 63 years, according to his grave stone in the Presbyterian church-yard at Yorktown, N. Y.; married May 11, 1761, Margaret, born 1744, died of cancer of the face March 27, 1822, aged 78 years; buried by her husband's side; daughter of Thomas and Martha (Sackett) Hazard of Long Island. According to some members of the family she was the daughter of Nathaniel Sackett, but John Strang (55) must have known his grandparents very well and he left the written word that she was the daughter of Thomas Hazard. Henry Strang lived at Yorktown, N. Y., engaged in farming, grazing, tanning and shoemaking. During the Revolutionary War he was made Captain in the 3rd Regiment of Westchester Co. under Col. Samuel Drake, before June 25, 1778.

During that trying period he suffered greatly and was often obliged to plow with a gun on his shoulder while Joseph Sackett, assisted him, being armed also. For some time during the Revolutionary War the homestead of Henry Strang was the headquarters of Lafayette. Henry was a staunch patriot and rendered efficient service while in the regiment of Col. Samuel Drake. The house in which he lived stood east of the old homestead of the late Hazard Strang. The well is still there and also the flat stone supposed to have been the door stone. The British raided his farm and drove off a herd of cattle, taking with them his son Thomas, who was later allowed to return home.

One day a spy named Palmer took him into the woods, pricked him sharply with a bayonet, and threatened him with death. After getting his freedom, Capt. Strang gathered his men together, surrounded the woods, captured Palmer and turned him over to the authorities.

"Trial of Edward Palmer. July 29, 1777.

The Prisoner pleads not Guilty. He was charged with plundering, Robbing and Carrying off the Cattle, Goods, etc., from the well effected inhabitants and for being a Spy from the enemy. After several men had testified against him, Henry Strang was sworn and said: that he being at a blacksmith's shop about a fortnight or three weeks ago, the prisoner and one with him came into the shop; upon the Witness attempting to get away the prisoner told him to Stand—and the Prisoner and the man with him tied him (the Witness).

The Witness resisted a little upon their tying him—on which Palmer the prisoner, pricked him with a bayonet—the Witness then went along with them. After getting about a quarter of a mile the Witness desired one Griffen as they passed by him to send to his family and acquaint them that he was taken—upon which the prisoner told the Witness that if he said anything more about it he would Run him through and pricked him again with his bayonet. Afterwards as they passed by John Tompkin's the Women Hallowed out and asked who they had there. Palmer answered, one of the Rebel Committee—they proceeded with the witness over Croton River into the Woods, that Palmer the present prisoner pricked him ten or twelve times with his Bayonet and occasioned him to bleed in many spots. Palmer demanded and took the Witness's pocket book from him with between fifty and sixty dollars in it, which he returned before the Witness came away—that they took the Witness in the afternoon and Let him go about Eleven o'clock in the night, upon the Witness Promising not to molest or Injure the Inhabitants about the place that the Witness was taken at; the prisoner said he took him because he was one of the Rebel Committee. The prisoner and the other man were both armed.

Many others testified and Palmer was hung on Gallows Hill as a spy."

During the declining years of Margaret (Hazard) Strang she was cared for by her daughter Sarah. She was noted for her religious life and took an active part in the controversy of the Yorktown Presbyterian Church in 1806 when Rev. Silas Constant succeeded in dividing the church, leaving only seventeen members at the old church, while she and Judge Elijah Lee the two most prominent members who stood firm to hold the church and grounds while the Constant party held the parsonage. These parties flourishing for many years, finally dwindled down to but one in each church, came back to the old Presbyterian faith about 1863. Margaret (Hazard) Strang was greatly revered by all her children and neighbors. She was very patient in her long illness and exhorted all who came to see her to care for their soul. She had a brother, Abraham Hazard, who was an Alderman of New York City, whose son Charles spent some time with his aunt at Yorktown, where he died quite young.

Martha (Sackett) Hazard died March 1, 1830, in her

83rd year, and is buried near her daughter Margaret Strang.

On May 2, 1806, one Margaret Strang was visited by a committee from the Yorktown Presbyterian Church to inquire why she had ceased attendance at church and on November, the same year, a charge was made against her for continually absenting herself from church and the worship of God and she was cut off from fellowship with the above church. SACKETT FAMILY

First Generation

SIMON SACKETT, with wife Isabel and their infant son Simon, came to America on the ship Lyon, which left Bristol, England, Dec. 1, 1630. She did not reach Boston until Feb. 5, 1631. About a month previous Governor Winthrop had selected a site for a new town, a few miles from Boston on the Charles River, and in the spring of 1631 Winthrop, Dudley and Bradstreet, with six other "principal gentlemen," including Simon Sackett, commenced the erection of some substantial buildings. The house built by Simon Sackett and occupied by him and his family stood on the north side of what is now Winthrop Street, in the centre of the block, between Brighton and Dunster Street. This place was called Newtown, but three years later christened Cambridge. Simon Sackett was a potent factor in laying out this embryo city, but the exposures of his mid-winter voyage had undermined his health and he died October, 1635.

On the third day of November following his widow was granted authority to administer his estate. Her name as his widow appears on the Newtown records for the last time on Feb. 8, 1636. In June of that year Rev. Hooker's congregation, having either sold or leased their dwelling, removed to Connecticut, widow Sackett and her boys forming part of the migrating company.

They located in Hartford, Conn., and she became the second wife of William Bloomfield.

Second Generation

SIMON SACKETT, son of Simon and Isabel Sackett, was born in England in 1630 and died July 9, 1659. About 1652 he married Sarah, the daughter of his step-father, William Bloomfield. At that time he was located in Springfield, Mass.

William Bloomfield, born 1604, died 1664, the father of Sarah, wife of Simon Sackett, sailed for New England in 1634 on the ship Elizabeth, which left Yarmouth in April and reached Boston in June. He brought with him his wife Sarah, aged 25, and their only child, an infant daughter, aged about one year. He removed from Cambridge (then Newtown), Mass., to Hartford, Conn., in 1635, and in 1637, with Capt. Mason, participated in the campaign against the Pequot Indians. In 1638 the records of Newtown, Mass., show that he sold to Robert Stedman the house and lot on the north side of Winthrop Street, between Dunster and Brighton streets, which property, according to Paige's Map of Cambridge in 1635, was the Saskett homestead.

Porter's Map of Hartford in 1640 shows his dwelling in the centre of a spacious corner lot near "Little River" on road from "Mill to Country."

The historical catalogue of First Church of Hartford records that William Bloomfield and family remained there until 1648, when they removed to New London. It is not known how long they remained there, but in 1656 were in Springfield, Mass., and later at Middleberg, Long Island, where for the remainder of his life he was a leading citizen. In 1663, when the English towns of New Netherland rebelled against the Dutch authority, the civil affairs of Middleburg were by choice of the inhabitants placed in charge of Wm. Bloomfield and five other trusted citizens.

Third Generation

JOSEPH SACKETT, son of Simon and Sarah (Bloomfield) Sackett, born Feb. 23, 1656, at Springfield, Mass.; died Sept. 23, 1719, in Newtown, L. I. After the death of his father in 1659, he appears to have been mostly with his grandfather Bloomfield. He lived practically all his life at Newtown, L. I., and his name frequently appears in the list of Road Commissioners, Assessors, Collectors and Supervisors of the town.

The Colonial and Documentary Histories of New York show he was commissioned by successive Governors of the Colony as Ensign, Lieutenant and Captain of Long Island troops. His name also found in lists of recipients of Royal Patents or land grants, and of Commissioners selected and appointed to adjust town and county boundary disputes.

He married three times. His first wife was the mother of all his children but one. She was Elizabeth, daughter of Capt. Richard Betts. His second wife is unknown, living but a short time after marriage. His third wife was Mercy, widow of Capt. Thomas Betts, brother of his first wife.

Daniel Whitehead, 1603-1668, the grandfather of Mercy, the third wife of Capt. Joseph Sackett, was the founder of the Long Island family by that name. He was one of the Patentees of Newtown, L. I. He was chosen in 1668 as a Town Surveyor, and died on his farm at Mespot Kills in November of that year. At the time of his death he was one of the Chief Magistrates of the town.

Major Daniel Whitehead, his son, and father of Mercy, married Abigail Stephenson, daughter of Thomas, and settled in Jamaica, L. I. He was a Magistrate, a Member of the Colonial Assembly and a trustee of the Parish Church. His will, dated Nov. 13, 1703, proved Oct. 30, 1704, disposes of land in Jamaica, Hempstead, Oyster Bay, Flushing, Orange and Suffolk counties, all in the Colony of New York.

Capt. Joseph Sackett married Mercy Whitehead (Betts) in 1711, when he was 55 years of age, and had ten children, while she was 48 years and had nine children. With their son Samuel, born to them in 1712, it made an even score. Sixteen of this number married and had children, and among their descendants have been Governors of States, Cabinet Officers, Bishops, Authors of note, Judges, Generals and Ministers of the United States to the principal courts of Europe.

Capt. Joseph Sackett's will, dated Sept. 20, 1719, and probated Dec. 22, 1719, mentions his wife and children, calls himself of Newtown, L. I., and leaves his son Samuel, not of age, "all my manshon where I now dwell, with all the buildings, and the lot of land and garden and orchards, and all that land I have of my uncle Daniel Bloomfield, &c."

Fourth Generation

REV. SAMUEL SACKETT, son of Capt. Joseph and Mercy (Whitehead-Betts) Sackett, born Newtown, L. I., March 2, 1712; died June 5, 1784; married Hannah Hazard, daughter of Nathaniel and Deborah (Alsop) Hazard.

In 1735 they removed to Orange Co., N. Y., where both families were largely interested in unimproved lands, owning thousands of acres in what are now the towns of New Windsor, Cornwall, Woodbury, Blooming Grove and Montgomery. The young couple resided during the greater part of eight years at the foot of Storm King Mountain, near Cornwall, where he labored as a missionary. In 1742 he was sent to preach in Westchester Co., the special field assigned him being Cortlandt Manor. In 1743 he was installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Bedford. From 1747 to 1749 Crompond (now Yorktown) secured his services for half the time. From 1749 to April 11, 1753, he labored at Bedford. He was then settled over the church at Hanover, where he remained until 1760, when he returned to Crompond. In 1765 he was again at Hanover, which became the scene of his labors until after the commencement of the Revolution. A letter written by him to his son Nathaniel at Fishkill, N. Y., dated Hanover, Oct. 29, 1776, says: "Send us two wagons immediately to help us away with some small things before the enemy are upon us."

During the struggle his position was most trying. His daughter Hannah, the wife of Stephen De Lancey, was in a noted Tory family ,and his son was in the American army. His flock was divided.

In July, 1779, the meeting house at Crompond was destroyed by fire kindled by the British cavalry.

For over a century his grave has been plainly marked in the yard adjoining the Presbyterian Church at Yorktown.

Thomas Hazard, the grandfather of Hannah, wife of Rev. Samuel Sackett, came to Boston in 1635. He had two wives, both named Martha. In 1652 he became one of the first magistrates of Newtown, Long Island.

Jonathan Hazard, his son, married Hannah Laurenson, daughter of James, and resided at Newtown. He served under various Governors of the Province, thirteen years as a Magistrate, four years as Supervisor, one year as Assessor. He died in 1711.

Nathaniel Hazard, son of Jonathan and Hannah (Laurenson) Hazard; married Deborah Alsop Simpkins, daughter of Richard Alsop and wife of Capt. John Simpkins, and they were the parents of the wife of Rev. Samuel Sackett.

Fifth Generation

JOSEPH SACKETT, son of Rev. Samuel and Hannah (Hazard) Sackett, born April 18, 1735; died Oct. 1, 1757; married Elizabeth Strang (No. 21), daughter of Daniel Strang.

A letter written from Hanover, June 7, 1757, to his brother Nathaniel in New York may be of interest as regards the business of the times:

DEAR BROTHER:

The boat not going off as soon as I expected, I have taken some more butter, which I send with the other to you with a staff I have made for you. I believe if I had a dozen pairs of spectacles they would sell pretty soon. The rum goes off briskly. The two pieces of forest cloth, the shallows, and especially the two dozen worsted capes seem to stick on hand slowly. I shall be glad if you will inform me what skins I sent you fetch apiece, and also how much I may allow for mink skins, if you can inform yourself handily, and also whether I may take sewing thread and at what price, and you will oblige,

Your affectionate brother,

JOSEPH SACKETT.

P. S.—The butter I send was all in one large butter tub, two small tubs and a pail; all good, fresh butter excepting that in the great tub, which is middling. I must get you to keep a memorandum of what the butter fetches or comes to. I must beg one more favor of you, and that is that you will send a pair of men's glasses to me by the bearer that will about suit yourself, which a certain person desires me to send for. I am, in haste,

Your affectionate brother,

JOSEPH SACKETT.
